Mold toxins, heavy metal toxins, herbicides, pesticides, fungicides, and hormones are some examples of toxins the liver converts into a water-soluble form the kidneys can filter. When these toxins can not be removed due to the liver being overwhelmed by these toxins, cells are required to hold these toxins creating dysfunction.

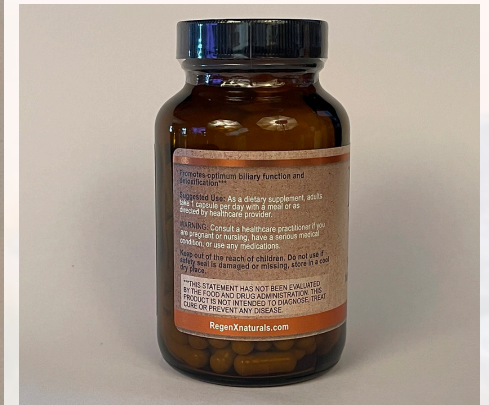

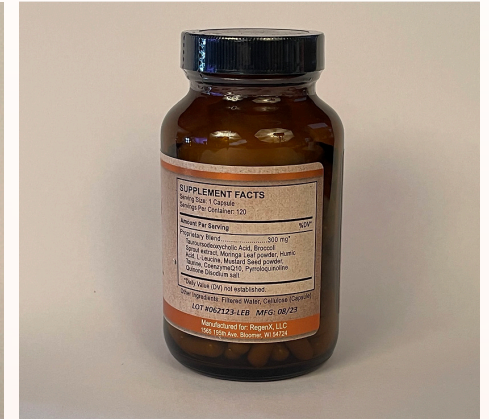

Liver congestion often leads to gallbladder dysfunction due to sludge and stone formation in the gallbladder. Supporting detoxification pathways of liver while offering bile support for the gall bladder allows the biliary system support for clearing toxins and digesting fats.

LVR-RGN when taken with meals supports bile production and normal digestion of fats. When taken between meals or at bedtime, LVR-RGN supports regeneration of liver and gallbladder by supporting phase 1 and phase 2 liver function.,

Patients with sluggish bile production or who have had their gallbladder surgically removed will often require bile support due to the inability to release enough bile to digest fats. Insufficient bile often leads to poor digestion of fats, reabsorption of toxins, SIBO and diarrhea.

Excess estrogens throughout a cycling females' reproductive years, during pregnancy and after birth often cause a gallbladder attack and surgical removal is common. LVR-RGN supports normal bile production, bile flow and phase 1-2 liver detoxification. Chronic fatigue and fibromyalgia are also often associated with chronic liver congestion due to mitochondria dysfunction from unprocessed toxins being held at a cellular level.
